

Take your writing to the next level: Grammarly at ALAAC 2018

SAN FRANCISCO, CA | JUNE 15, 2018 — Grammarly, the company behind the AI-powered digital writing assistant with over 10 million daily users, will be present at the American Library Association Annual Conference in 2018.

At Grammarly, we want to make communication easy and clear for everyone. While social media, email, and collaboration tools have increased the frequency and speed of communication, Grammarly has always focused on improving the substance of communication. Consider our writing assistant your personal line editor and tutor — someone who's by your side when you want to write your best.

We're thrilled to be at the ALAAC 2018. Students and professionals alike use Grammarly to make sure their work is clear, effective, and mistake-free. In a survey taken of Grammarly student users, 99% of respondents reported that their writing grades had improved with Grammarly as a writing partner.

Our algorithms check grammar, spelling, and punctuation errors, as well as more complicated aspects of writing like word choice and sentence structure. We don't just make corrections; we're invested in helping our users better understand what makes writing effective.

Our browser extension integrates seamlessly into Google Chrome, Safari, Firefox, and Edge. We also have the browser-based Grammarly Editor, a native desktop app, Grammarly for Microsoft Office, and the Grammarly Keyboard.

As a special treat for conference attendees, we're offering a free Grammarly Premium test account if you RSVP at <https://www.grammarly.com/edu/rsvp>. Be sure to sign up before the conference! Then, come by booth 1125 in the exhibition hall, grab some swag, and see how Grammarly can take your employees', your students', or your own writing to the next level.
